

The power to improve your neighbourhoods

Thinking Outside the Box: Networks and Relationships

11 May 2010

Faced with challenges such as worklessness, reduced public spending and increased community conflict it has never been more important to make sure our work in neighbourhoods is robust and sustainable with strong, empowered communities at the heart.

In this workshop we will explore the importance of developing a strong network at the start of any project or programme to make it sustainable. We will also explore the importance of empowered space within that network. This space can support the development of strong relationships and enable those living and working in neighbourhoods to influence the decisions affecting them.

Who is this event aimed at?

Managers and practitioners

The Workshop Will:

- Explore the concept of the web
- Explore the characteristics of empowered spaces – person centred, reflective, action centred
- Stimulate conversations of connections with participants work and experiences
- Enable participants to engage and critically reflect on strengthening and expanding their own webs
- Be thought- provoking but also fun and creative.
- Give an opportunity for us to help each other, sharing and developing practice that makes a difference to our work.

Duration: 1 Day

Time: 10:00 – 16:00

Cost: Free including refreshments and lunch

Delivered by: Dr Brendan Harvey and Carolyn Anderson
